INTRODUCTION

The "Nonpublic Elementary-Secondary School Report, 1981-82" presents current nonpublic enrollment and graduate data for all cooperating nonpublic schools in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Included among these nonpublic schools are sectarian and nonsectarian schools that operated educational programs consisting of organizational arrangements of kindergarten through grade 12, including elementary exceptional, secondary exceptional and post-graduate programs.

There are several tables in this report that classify the enrollment and graduate data into various categories. In addition to the tables, the data are further supported by the use of trend tables for the past decade, graphs and interpretive narrative.

The nonpublic school enrollment data for the 1972-73 school year showed a decline of 30,725 students from the total enrollment from the previous school year. This decline was the largest in the past ten years and in sharp contrast to the increase of 1,697 students in the total enrollment reported for the 1981-82 school year. Enrollment at the elementary level has declined steadily since the 1972-73 school year. However, data for 1981-82 show a slight increase in elementary enrollment. Except for an increase in the 1973-74 school year, enrollment at the secondary level has decreased steadily since 1972-73. Again, data for the 1981-82 school year show a small increase at the secondary level.

The increase in total nonpublic school enrollment in the 1981-82 school year is the first such increase since the peak year of 1963-64 when a total of 631,783 students were enrolled in nonpublic schools.

The total number of nonpublic schools reporting enrollment data to the Division of Education Statistics showed a dramatic increase in the 1981-82 school year. The 1,815 reporting schools are the largest number to do so in the past ten years. In the past ten years the fewest number of reporting schools was 1,578 during the 1974-75 school year. The total number of schools has increased steadily each year with the exception of the 1977-78 and 1980-81 school years. Although the increase in the number of reporting schools (58) reported during the 1981-82 school year is significant, it is not the largest increase. Data for the 1979-80 school year showed an increase of 112 reporting schools from the previous school year.

The number of elementary schools reporting enrollment data has fluctuated during the past ten years. However, the data show a general increase since the 1977-78 school year. The number of secondary schools has remained rather steady during the past ten years, although since 1977-78 there has been a slight decline. The most notable change shown by the data is the increase in the number of combined elementary and secondary schools reporting enrollments to the Division of Education Statistics. The number of combined schools increased by 180 or 118 percent since the 1972-73 school year.

The total number of teachers employed by nonpublic schools has not changed significantly during the past ten years. It is interesting to note that the ratio of elementary teachers to secondary teachers has remained constant throughout the decade even though data on Table 1 showed a decrease in the number of elementary pupils during the same time period.

The trend data for the past ten years show the direct relationship between the total nonpublic enrollment and the enrollment in Roman Catholic schools. The direct relationship is illustrated by the parallel decline in total enrollment and enrollment in Roman Catholic schools. Underlying this parallel decline in enrollments is the fact that the proportion of the total enrollment represented by Roman Catholic schools has declined from 88.2 percent in 1972-73 to 78.7 percent in 1981-82. Enrollment in non-Roman Catholic schools has increased by 55.2 per cent since 1977-78, whereas enrollment in Roman Catholic schools has declined by 22.8 per cent since 1972-73.

1980-81	1 757	913	844
1981-82	1 815	899	916

Data relative to the comparative distribution of the number of nonpublic schools are displayed for the past five years. These data illustrate a trend similar to the enrollment trend data relative to comparative nonpublic school enrollment displayed in Table 4. The noteworthy item in the above table is the fact that for the first time since data concerning nonpublic schools have been compiled for this series (1959) the number of non-Roman Catholic schools has exceeded the number of Roman Catholic schools. The significant characteristic masked by this change in distribution is the fact that Roman Catholic schools average over 300 students per school as compared to less than 100 students per non-Roman Catholic school.

Data for the nonpublic secondary schools which submitted a Nonpublic Secondary School Report, Form DEAS-232, show a total of 24,557 high school graduates in 1981. This figure is 1.5 per cent higher than the 24,188 twelfth-grade graduates reported for the 1980 survey.

As in past years, over fifty per cent of the graduating class were reported as attending degree-granting institutions. The data for the 1980 graduating class showed that 63.0 per cent or 15,471 high school graduates were continuing their education at degree-granting institutions.

The aggregated data showed that 7.1 per cent of the 24,557 high school graduates were continuing their education at nondegree-granting schools, such as vocational-technical schools, nursing schools and nondegree business schools.
